THESE FOLKS BOUGHT BOXWOOD FROM US---THEY ARE GLAD THEY DID---THEY SAY SO

It was beautiful, healthy and vigorous when it was planted, it still is, and of course each year as it mellows with age it blends more into the finished picture

Matched pairs of these century-old plants placed on either side of a doorway add that inimitable atmosphere of hospitality to any estate; skillfully used in garden plantings it brings the grace and grandeur and romance of generations past within a modern garden wall.

A "Moving" Picture of a Box Tree

For over 70 Years these Trees grew in the Valley of Virginia

Then in a few days they were

Dug and Ready to Haul

By Truck and Trailer to Load on Cars, Balls of Earth Securely Braced.

Foliage Protected by Covers, Sewed on.

Within ten days the trees were growing on an estate in New Jersey.

It is something of an accomplishment to meet the exacting standards of those who "just can't find what they want elsewhere"... and DO find it here.

About the year 1400 the Royal Gardens contained Boxwood clipped in shapes of many animals and birds.

The Boxwood brought from England and planted at Lower Brandon, Va. about 1635 is still in perfect condition as well as the fine Box Gardens on other famous old Virginia places, Mount Vernon, Stratford House, Westover, Red Hill, Brandon and Shirley. What other evergreen would survive these many years and retain its beautiful form and texture.

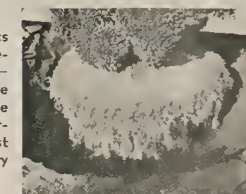

The rare charm and air of living antiquity that surround genuine Old English Boxwood cannot be duplicated in any other shrub. Its delicate aroma and perennially beautiful foliage lend century-old grace and interest to your gardens.

Here in the Conwell Gardens, in the heart of the Boxwood country, you will find beautiful hedges, matched pairs and single pieces of unrivalled beauty awaiting your selection.

Small fibrous roots must be carefully preserved in digging--protected from the sun and from damage in transit--and generous balls of earth must be taken with every specimen.

Improved methods of moving cause our Boxwood to start growing immediately. Special covers protect from drying out and damage.

Our Boxwood is FRESH DUG for YOUR order.

For eleven years our replacements have been less than one-tenth of one per cent.
